1. Concerns: I'm firstly wondering if the one-page format is successful or if I should spread the content more over the site. I'm also a little concerned about the organization of the essay itself, as I have to introduce several ideas throughout the body (i.e. Seasonal Affective Disorder, the Gruen Effect), and I'm not sure if these thoughts are organized very fluidly. Lastly, I'm wondering if the term I created, "escapist architecture," suits the style I'm trying to describe, as the word "escapist" can have some negative connotations in the field of psychology.

2. Claim: The greenhouse provides an environment that helps its users escape from winter weather, consequently fostering enhanced productivity and, more importantly, positive moods.

3. Logical structure
   a. Second-person description of the space and its environment
   b. Winter
      i. the more negative side to winter weather at Dartmouth College
      ii. the psychological impacts that this weather can have on those who live or spend time at Dartmouth (Seasonal Affective Disorder)
         1. How SAD is usually treated
   c. The Greenhouse and Gruen
      i. Discuss elements of greenhouse
      ii. Connect these features to SAD
      iii. Introduce Gruen Effect
      iv. Connect Gruen Effect to greenhouse
   d. Escapist architecture
      i. The greater significance of this idea that an indoor space can transport visitors and distract them from their realities

4. Evidence: I would like to collect more concrete evidence, such as interviews and perhaps some quantifiable data from observational studies.

5. Graphic design: I struggled a bit in making this website, but I hope to clear it up over the weekend and add the video.

6. Revision plan: fixing up website, adding video, clarifying argument and structure of essay, perhaps adding more tabs/pages to do so

Logical Structure

I. Connecting background
   A. talks about the cold of winter, something that Dartmouth students and New Englanders can all identify with
   B. Alludes to SAD

II. The Greenhouse and the Gruen:
   A. description of greenhouse
   B. greenhouse combats depression
   C. Describes Gruen Effect
   D. Connect Gruen Effect and Greenhouse

III. Escapist Architecture
A. Significance

Claim: Dartmouth’s Greenhouse provides a space on campus in which students can subconsciously alter their mood to one that is much healthier through the Gruen effect and escapist architecture.

Evidence: Your rich description of the greenhouse’s features as well as your incorporation of Gruen into the argument is very convincing. These two seem to align very well and your description of the greenhouse makes that connection convincing. If you could do some sort of qualitative survey, you’d be in really great shape.

Graphic Design:
The theme you chose is really great for your topic. The white background adds to the idea of the simplicity of the greenhouse. Their is a good balance between pictures and text. The organization is really helpful too. I really like the gallery as well. Overall, I liked the graphic design.
